Lavish Extravagance and Hidden Treasures

Huguette's private world was a testament to her peculiar tastes and lavish spending. She owned two opulent mansions: Bellosguardo in Santa Barbara, California, and the sprawling Copper Beech Farm in Greenwich, Connecticut. Within these grand estates, she amassed a vast collection of art, antiques, and dolls.

Eccentric Behavior and Secretive Nature

Huguette's eccentricities extended beyond her material possessions. She feared doctors and hospitals and lived in virtual isolation for decades. Her only communication with the outside world was through a small circle of trusted staff and lawyers.

A Puzzling Death and Legal Battles

When Huguette passed away at the age of 104 in 2011, her secretive life left a trail of unanswered questions. Her will, which left the bulk of her fortune to charities, sparked legal battles between her estranged relatives and the institutions named as beneficiaries.
