Bensley's photographs are not simply documentation of films and their stars. Rather, they are meditations on the ways in which cinema has influenced our lives. In one image, a young boy sits in a darkened movie theater, his face illuminated by the flickering light of the screen. In another, a group of friends gather around a television, their expressions a mixture of anticipation and excitement. These images speak to the power of cinema to transport us to other worlds, to make us laugh, cry, and think.

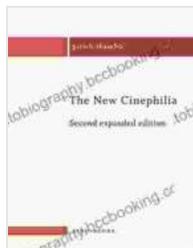

Bensley's book is not only a celebration of cinema, but also a thoughtful exploration of its complexities. He writes about the ways in which cinema can be used to promote social change, but also about its potential to be used for propaganda and manipulation. He argues that in the digital age, it is more important than ever to be critical of the images we consume, and to understand the ways in which they shape our worldview.

The New Cinephilia is a must-read for anyone who loves cinema. It is a beautiful and thought-provoking book that will challenge the way you think about the movies.

Bensley's photographs are accompanied by essays from a variety of leading film critics and scholars, including J. Hoberman, Mark Cousins, and David Bordwell. These essays provide a deeper understanding of the themes explored in the book, and offer insights into the history and future of cinema.

The New Cinephilia is a groundbreaking work that will change the way we think about cinema. It is a must-read for anyone who loves film, and for anyone who is interested in the ways in which media shapes our culture.
