Excerpt from Fablehaven: Grip of the Shadow Plague:

Kendra and Seth Sorensen ran through the forest, their hearts pounding in their chests. They had been chased by a shadow creature all day, and they were starting to get tired. But they couldn't give up now. They had to find a way to defeat the creature before it destroyed Fablehaven.

"I can't run anymore," Seth said, panting. "I'm too tired."

"We have to keep going," Kendra said. "If we stop, it will catch us."

They ran on, their legs burning. They could hear the creature's footsteps getting closer behind them. They knew they wouldn't be able to outrun it for much longer.

Just when they were about to give up, they came to a clearing. In the middle of the clearing was a large tree. The tree was covered in leaves, and its branches were so thick that they blocked out the sun.

"Maybe we can hide in the tree," Kendra said. "It might not be able to see us in there."

They ran to the tree and climbed up its branches. They found a spot high up in the tree, where they could hide among the leaves. They waited there, listening for the creature's footsteps.

They didn't have to wait long. A few minutes later, they heard the creature's footsteps in the clearing. They watched as it walked around the tree, sniffing the ground. It couldn't see them in the leaves, but they could see it.

Kendra and Seth stayed very still. They didn't want to make any noise that would attract the creature's attention.

After a few minutes, the creature gave up and walked away. Kendra and Seth sighed with relief. They had escaped the creature for now, but they knew they weren't out of danger yet.

They climbed down from the tree and started to walk back to Fablehaven. They had to find a way to defeat the creature before it destroyed the preserve.
